

Select Subsector

Q1 | 2025 Commentary

The Select Subsector portfolio's performance can be attributed to the strategy's specific sector-focused weighting amongst eleven sectors of the S&P 500 GICS sector lineup and their varying subsectors.

Last quarter's infrequent equity sell-offs layered into a heavier tone that has fully taken shape in 2025, with market fatigue and the anticipation of geopolitical changes now abruptly on the horizon. Certainly, the incoming administration's policies' effectiveness remains a bit in doubt, and the quick nature of amendments to said policies and the gauging of their economic impact put a reversal into the equity market uptrend by the time the first quarter concluded. With the Federal Reserve in play but perhaps approaching a scenario where their hands could be tied on policy action, the previous expansion in the labor market and inflation indicators that will be impacted are now at risk of being brushed aside to digest the prevailing, but abruptly changing, economic environment. So far, volatility and nervous selling has been the reaction in major markets as investors realign their tolerances for risk.

The portfolio's viable ten sector and subsector approach helped, at times, to avoid downside exposure compared to overall S&P 500 volatility that became very present last quarter. The defensive nature some of the sector allocations held within the portfolio were able to provide shelter from the storm when most needed. However, with the current risk environment now overcoming the upside reward that was first seen towards the end of 2024, specific sectors are currently experiencing larger than normal standard deviation and volatility, which we feel is more incidental than secular. Thus, economically insulated areas like healthcare whose subsectors we own in medical devices (IHI) and providers (IHF) have been steadfast at times, while more targeted areas of recent market weakness like semiconductors (XSD) and software services (XSW) have underperformed. Other sectors that continue to be considered for investment will be monitored closely for fundamental re-strengthening as some of the economic uncertainty works itself out in the coming months.

At Kingsview Investment Management, we appreciate your continued support of the Select Subsector portfolio. Global economic strains and other international developments have thrust markets into challenging efforts to align price and risk. The impacts long term shall be worked out over time as history has dutifully guided, but short term emotions remain heightened and overly sensitive to daily news and data flow.
